| Rationale    | Exploring ways of thinking Christianly about education is central to the Graduate Certificate in Christian Education and Master of Education, and development of a considered Christian vision of education is foundational to the more specialised studies which follow later in the courses.
Classical, modern, and postmodern philosophies have all generated theories and approaches to education, and the unit therefore introduces the range and variety of educational models and some of the key points of difference. Students can then reflect on their own theological convictions and the varying theological currents which flow through the literature on Christian education.
Without developed abilities to draw connections between faith and its educational implications, teaching may well be a philosophically eclectic or unreflective task which is Christian only in name rather than by virtue of vital and organic connections. |
| Learning outcomes | On completion of this unit, students will have provided evidence that they have:
1. thought philosophically and theologically about education;
2. compared a range of classical and contemporary philosophies, and the educational theories which they have generated;
3. considered the foundations, features and implications of Christian educational models;
4. described and defended a Christian educational framework in comparison with secular frameworks;
5. critically applied Christian thinking to a current educational issue; and
6. communicated at an appropriate tertiary standard, with special attention to design elements, grammars, usage, logical relations, style and presentation. |
