SO102 Introduction to Applied Social Theories |
| Rationale | Much of counselling and applied social sciences practice focuses on the person in relational context including family systems; therefore, those in the people-helping professions require a solid understanding of current theoretical approaches pertaining to both healthy and unhealthy family functioning. This is particularly important for those working within a child protection framework.
This unit focuses specifically on equipping students with advanced knowledge concerning a range of models of family functioning and development, as well as important themes and tasks that are shared by most families. Opportunity will also be given to reflect on important dimensions of family functioning and experience from a Christian worldview. |
