Rationale	Counsellors today are required to work in a broad range of contexts and situations, with diverse groups of people representing different interests and priorities. As a result, practitioners often confront situations that involve mediating or resolving conflict between individuals or groups with different perspectives or objectives. Such situations require considerable theoretical understanding and practical skills on the part of the practitioner. This unit is designed to introduce students to the theory and practice of mediation and conflict resolution, including through personal experience in these activities. In addition, students will reflect on the strengths and weaknesses of different approaches and form a framework in which to undertake these tasks for themselves.
