Prerequisites/ co-requisites/ restrictions	Pre or co-requisite CO667 Reflective Practice: Consolidating Foundations
Rationale	Psychotherapy and neuroscience research conducted during the last two decades has consistently suggested that the therapeutic relationship between the counselling practitioner and client is a major predictor and determinant of effective therapeutic processes and outcomes. More recently, the core condition and centrality of this unique relationship has been additionally substantiated and confirmed by advanced technological research of neuroscience. This unit is the second with an embedded practicum component and is designed to give students the opportunity to investigate the various aspects of the therapeutic relationship as underpinning their counselling framework. By utilising the reflective practice skills learned in CO667 Reflective Practice: Consolidating Foundations to engage with a range of models and dimension of the therapeutic relationship, including attachment, transference/counter-transference, resonance and resistance, the student will develop their therapeutic relationship style that will become an integral aspect of their counselling framework. The unit also explores various perceptions of the major counselling approaches on the therapeutic relationship, including implications of a Christian worldview in the formation of such an alliance.
