Rationale	Performing in dramatic presentations provides students with the opportunity not only to test their own gifts as performers but also to become familiar with the discipline and expectations involved in working in the drama industry. Many students also require experience in the process and skills of staging dramatic performance for future involvement in dramatic productions. Finally, involvement in dramatic performance provides an unparalleled opportunity for students to learn about themselves, God and his creation as they develop a personal understanding and appreciation of live theatre. The production of a live dramatic performance enables students to work together to learn about the Christian values of commitment and respect. Students will participate in an ensemble production presented in a theatre or alternative performance space, under the careful direction of a CHC lecturer and/or an invited director. They will be taken through each stage in the process of dramatic presentation, from workshopping to blocking and rehearsals, and ultimately to the performance itself. Students will be encouraged to reflect on the relationship between text and performance, and to evaluate their own development and the performance as a whole. In this way, students will not only gain practical experience, but will also be developing important analytical skills.
