Rationale	Group participation is a vital part of the everyday life of all people. These groups may be encountered in many places including family, work, social, sporting and church settings. Counselling practitioners also know the value of support and therapy groups. As groups are an integral part of all of life, it is important that counselling practitioners have a good understanding of the dynamics and processes that regulate groups. This unit, therefore, gives the student opportunity to not only examine the theory of group dynamics but they will also participate in a group experience. Such an experience will enable the student to understand the personal growth that may accompany effective groups and to gain the knowledge and skills required to intentionally facilitate a group process where individuals can flourish in a safe environment. Because of the experiential nature of this unit an inductive learning style is facilitated. The theoretical aspects of group dynamics are integrated throughout the unit but the focus of the unit is to experience group process and personal growth by being a group.
